Of 34 women with stress incontinence, 20 have been followed for at least 6 months and have had the combined procedure of midurethral sling and suburethral balloon (SUB) inflated over the area of the true urethral hypermobility. Each patient was then asked to keep a detailed chart of the number of pads used each day, the duration of each pad use, and the type of pad used. Ninety percent of patients were cured or significantly improved after the combined procedure. Seventy-five percent of those cured had done well, and 75% of those improved remained improved. Excluding operative complications, results showed that the success rates were superior to those reported with both the midurethral sling alone (79% cure, 71% improvement) and the SUB alone (40% cure, 50% improvement). Only 8 of the patients required subsequent procedures to retain cure or improvement.

Spontaneous pneumothorax following radiotherapy to the lung. Spontaneous pneumothorax following radiotherapy to the lung is rare. It is usually seen following the administration of a single dose of an alpha emitter and is characterised by recurrent, acute, pneumothorax, once the radiation dose of the emitter has been exceeded. The aetiology has remained poorly understood. In this report we describe a patient who developed pneumothorax following twice-daily radiotherapy to the ipsilateral lung and are discussing the possible causes of this
