this episode also has a more personal element to it, as a local business owner comes to raiga and gives him a gun, saying that they shouldn't fight because they could lose a third of their business. despite raiga's attempts to persuade him otherwise, the man says he knows who raiga is and will not give in to threats. the final showdown goes against what you'd expect: raiga plans to use his masterful sword-based techniques against naruto, who uses chidori in place of his legendary blade, and defeats him. sasuke's entrance and him after raiga's death are also notable. i looked into what happened and it seems, that the planned version of this episode, before censorship, had sasuke inflicting fairly deep wounds on raiga until raiga was forced to hold back. sasuke, afterwards, was furious at raiga for the beatdown and threatened to kill him. the episode that aired, however, had sasuke "accidentally" injuring raiga with a thin piece of steel, thus making the latter popular among many fans. still, this appearance has a nice effect, giving a sense of weight to naruto's over-the-top battles. it's also proven that sasuke respects naruto enough to hold back, and it's a cool moment for fans to see. it can still be hard for fans to get through a lot of this, though. this episode is double-edged: not only does it feature fights between ninja and bandits, but also between the shinobi and the business owner himself. he was the man who decided to fight by raiga, and like a lot of these types of fillers, this one has no shortage of lewd jokes. the anime is distributed across the world with netflix as the most popular japanese-english dubbing provider. however, you can watch naruto in french on the various services such as amazon, hulu, crunchyroll, and shomi. the episodes in the french dub vary depending on the source that you choose to watch. the least amount of episodes available from netflix is 102, while hulu has the most at 600. crunchyroll has the most complete selection with 515 episodes while it's the least popular among dubbers. it's also the easiest to use as it has the most of the streaming options in one place.
